Changes are coming to main street in Lucy's hometown. A new hardware store has opened and a supermarket is planned, leaving everyone wondering if Lucy's grandfather will sell his corner grocery store. But Lucy isn't worried. The store is too busy to be forced out of competition; everything anybody needs is right there.

"The author illustrator of City Green (1994) and Uncle Willie and the Soup Kithchen (1991) again celebrates community spirit, this time with a tale of a take-charge child who refuses to let her grandpa's corner grocery quietly disappear when a big supermarket opens down the street. Having already seen the neighborhood hardware store closed by competition, Lucy indignantly rejects the idea that her grandpa would likewise knuckle under; so she is understandably dismayed when a "For Sale ...
