The last person Nash Wiley expects to bump into over a two a.m. breakfast at Waffle House is her college crush, decked out in a curve-hugging law enforcement uniform. Nash can't believe her luck when Ms. Crush asks to join her, explaining that she's just getting off shift. But something seems a little off. It could be the glitter in her eye shadow, or the black lace bra peeking from her barely buttoned uniform shirt, or maybe the exotic dancers who stroll in from the local gentleman's club and crash their private reunion. Nash isn't sure she's still hungry until the waitress takes her order. "How you want those hashbrowns, hon?" Ms. Crush pins Nash with a sultry gaze and answers for her. "Mmm. I've heard she likes hers smothered and covered."

Unexpectedly, loss can teach us how to love. For Eliza Walsh, life is full of risk. She knows a thing or two about pain, and not just from her job as chief resident at the hospital. She's reeling from a car accident that took the life of the only woman she's ever loved, and her parents' betrayal has strained their relationship to the point of nonexistence. But Blake Navarro enters the picture and challenges Eliza's cautious way of living. Blake's everything she isn't: open, carefree, and a little reckless. When Eliza discovers that Blake, too, is healing from a huge loss, she feels seen, understood, and less alone. As Eliza and Blake fall for each other, they heal in ways they never expected. But when Eliza's troubled past catches up with her, it changes everything, and she has to decide if fully opening her heart is worth the risk.
